

The green river winds and sings
through cottonwoods and canyon rings.
There, he's got a line dropped deep,
a sky so wide, a soul at peace.
The campfire's warm, the night is kind—
his best stories never far behind.

And if someday I walk that shore,
hear water laugh, or canyon roar—
I'll look close: his tent might be in sight,
his boots by a fire burning bright.
Not gone, just waiting, calm and free,
where heaven meets the memories.
