Obituary

Deborah A. Jackson, the fourth child and youngest daughter of the late Stonewall and Iris Jackson, was born on February 21, 1954 in Bluefield, West Virginia. Deborah was baptized at an early age under the leadership of the late Reverend Norris Dickerson.

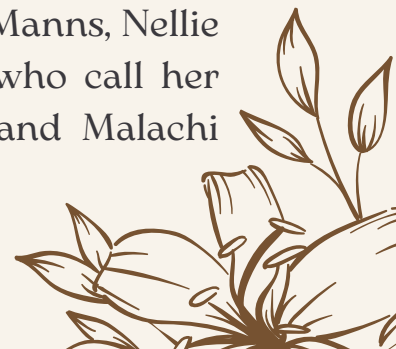

After graduating from Bluefield High School in 1973, Deborah relocated to Boston, Massachusetts to live with her sister Flo and to pursue a career in healthcare. Deborah interned as a Nursing Aide at the Veteran Affairs Medical Center, Jamaica Plain Campus. She intended to use this training to care for her mother who sadly departed this earth prior to Deborah's receipt of Associate and Bachelor's degrees in Nursing from Roxbury Community College and Northeastern University, respectively.

As a Registered Nurse, Deborah was affiliated with the Black Nurses Association and provided tireless hours of patient care to patrons of Veteran Affairs Administration Medical Center's West Roxbury Campus, where she later retired to care for her sister Flo.

Deborah loved her family and enjoyed reading, listening to music, and talking with friends.

Deborah was preceded in death by her brother, Jessie Jackson and sister, Flotense Jackson.

Those left to cherish her memory are her sister Jeanette Jackson; nieces: Iris Decker (Jason), Tamara Jackson, Patricia Jackson, and Makedjah Hackshaw; godson Brandon Jackson-Barham; close friends: Mable Burke, Dr. Damallie Kushna, Shirley Holland, Ronnie Majors, Mattie Manns, Nellie Moore, Craig Stewart, and Sterling Taylor; special friends who call her "Auntie Debbie": Michelle Burney, Tashawn-Moore Baker, and Malachi Plant; and extended family and friends.
