

*She was sunshine with a wild streak,
a California breeze in human form—blonde hair dancing, spirit untamed, never asking permission to be herself.*

*She spoke her truth, sharp and honest,
lived loud, laughed easy,
and rolled through life
like a song that never fades.*

*With music in her soul—Willie on the road, Elvis in the air—
she found joy in the simple things:
good friends, cold drinks, and open skies.*

But above all, she loved deeply—for her great grandson, her pride and light, and for those lucky enough to call her their own.

*She carried peace like a quiet strength, never rushed, never worried—
just living, just being,
just free.*

*And now she rests
as she lived—
bright, bold, and beautifully herself, with flamingos standing watch and the music still playing somewhere beyond.*
