

The Pain in the Flowers I Smell

As I kneel to smell the flowers,
I smell the grave beneath.
My tears fall gently down,
To the soil beneath the wreath.
The splash of sorrow on soil,
Brings another tear to fall,
As it does another memory,
Which I remember one and all.

The flowers with rain on their petals,
Will be remembered as non-divine,
As will the flowers stems,
Twisted and entwined.
I stand to walk away,
But return a lonely glance,
And despise the loving flowers,
For the sorrow they have enhanced.

Now as I look at the pictures of memory,
And remember the pain I've felt,
Not one of the pictures compare,
To the pain in the flowers I smell.
