

“Tribute from a Granddaughter”

By Sam Page

My idea of heaven and your experience of it might be very different,
But I imagine you warm.
Seventy-seven degrees, just like you kept your thermostat.

I imagine your hands having as much or little to do as they want,
Those hands that made everything
From paper dolls to peanut butter sandwiches.

I didn't know you in your youth,
But I imagine your joints becoming ache-less
As you dance among others no longer bound by the pains of age.
Playing as you let me play.

There are things I never told you,
Like how those paper dolls earned me an 'A' years later or
How peanut butter sandwiches tasted better when you made them.

I'm not much of a poet,
Though I'm sure you'd argue otherwise.
You always liked my stories.
And I always liked hearing what you thought.

My words are a small thing to give for everything you did for me.
We may be parted by more than 749 miles of road,
But I imagine you will not be far when I write.

I promise to bring daffodils
When I come to sit beside the stone
We lay you beneath today.

I love you, Grandma.
Be at peace.
