

And the voice of Jeshua speaks out from the heart:
"I give you peace that in its presence you may know your own being. Come to me in your peace and I will give abundantly to you.

Come to me in your joy and I will rejoice with you.

Come to me with your illusions, and I will give you truth.

Come to me with your pain and I will give you healing.

Come to me with your fears, and I will give you hope. Come to me with all that you say you are and I will give you who you really are.

I Am is the light and the truth, I Am is the power, I Am is the way.

In this sacred place, know yourself.

I call you by your name and simply say, Behold!

"You are beautiful, you are glorious, and you are the majesty of creation. And none of this is by your doing, but by your being. In the image of God you were created. As you consider yourself to be, so too will your life unfold.

Know yourself within the peace of God. The peace of God is beyond all illusion, and it knows no limitation, no death, and no end. This is your home. I welcome you with love."

Jennifer Lynn Johnston was born September 11, 1975. She passed away June 3, 2026, at the age of 50. She is survived by her mother, Teresa Ann Tharp of Winnsboro, TX; her aunt, Susan Van Pelt of Kirbyville, TX; her cousins, Alicia Kay Butler of Azel, TX, and Samuel Zachary Childers of Bryan, TX; stepsiblings, Shane Tharp of Rowlett, TX, Dane Tharp of Ft. Worth, TX, C.J. Tharp of Rockwall, TX, Trent Tharp of Caddo Mills, TX, and Tamarra Dedmon of Dallas, TX. She was preceded in death by her father, Anthony Joe Johnston; her grandparents, William Everett and Grace Lewis and Osville and Natalie Johnston; and her stepfather, Jimmy N. Tharp.

Jennifer grew up in Mesquite, TX and graduated from Mesquite High School. She attended The University of North Texas where she received a Bachelor's and Master's degree in Biology. Her passion after graduation was to work in dolphin research. She did an internship program in Hawaii in the hopes of being able to work full time in the program, however, the research institute lost funding and closed. She also interned at a sea life park in New Zealand for three months to work with their dolphins. Though she never lost her passion for dolphins, she decided she did not want to pursue a PhD in order to work in other programs and research facilities.

Jennifer loved baseball and played softball and fast pitch softball from her childhood up into her adult years. She was a pitcher and later played first base. After a shoulder injury, she had to give up playing. She was always a Texas Rangers fan.

Jennifer loved fishing. From the time she was a young child and up into her adult years, she was fishing. Her grandmother Johnston taught her early on how to tie on a lure or hook, thread a worm on a hook, and stick a minnow on a hook. She loved bass and trout fishing. Her father's family took a yearly trip to Arkansas to trout fish on the White River. Jennifer always looked forward to those trips with eager anticipation.

Jennifer was also passionate about genealogy. She spent countless hours researching online and drove hundreds of miles to search in graveyards for ancestors. In her research, she traced her ancestors through her father's family back to her sixth great grandfather, born in 1753, who fought in the American Revolution. She had documentation that would have allowed her to become a Daughter of the American Revolution, a Daughter of the Confederacy, and a Daughter of the Republic of Texas. However, she never submitted her documentation to those organizations for admission. Her passion for genealogy led her into gravestone restoration, which she found rewarding.

Jennifer spent many years working for UPS running their airport security office at DFW airport. After leaving that position, she eventually came to live with her mother and stepfather at the family farm in Winnsboro. She learned all aspects of managing the farm. She was a "natural" with cows and was soon lovingly referred to as "the cow whisperer."
