

A Life of Love and Grace

She walked with light in quiet grace,
A tender smile upon her face.
Her hands, so gentle, warm, and true,
Served with love in all they'd do.

From dawn's first glow to evening's rest,
She gave her all, she gave her best.
A mother's heart, so full, so wide,
With love that never turned aside.

No selfish thought, no word unkind,
A pureness rare, a selfless mind.
She saw the needs of those she met,
And gave, and gave, without regret.

Her kitchen filled with scents so sweet,
A table set with love complete.
Each dish she made, a gift, a care,
A touch of home, a whispered prayer.

And when the evening's hush drew near,
Soft melodies would calm and cheer.
Her fingers danced on ivory white,
A song of peace, a song of light.

To weary hearts, she was a friend,
A gentle soul with hands to lend.
Her life—a melody, a song,
Of kindness woven deep and strong.

Though time may pass, though days move on,
Her love remains, it lingers on.
In every note, in every smile,
In lives she touched across the miles.

For love like hers can never fade,
It lives in all the gifts she made.
A mother, wife, a heart so true,
Her grace, her light, still shining through.
