A True Warrior's Heart

J-coda was a soul of quiet strength and immense humility. A true warrior in every sense of the word, he faced his battle with a spirit that never faltered and a heart that never complained. Even in the hardest moments, his gaze was fixed on the future—on the "wonderful life" he knew was waiting when the fight was won.

To his siblings, he was a pillar of love. To his family, he was the center of a unit that could never be broken. Together, his parents, siblings, and select loved ones fought this battle as one. The doctors often remarked that it was the drive, knowledge, and pure, unfiltered love within our home that bought us at least a year longer of precious memories. That year was a gift of grace, fueled by the power of our bond.

We do not say goodbye today, because J-coda's peace remains in every corner of our home. We love you, always and forever. This isn't the end; it's just "later," my love.

Energy That Flourishes

"Energy never dies; it only transforms, flourishes, and regenerates. J-coda's spirit was too powerful to ever truly leave us. He loved everybody—it was as if the moment anyone became present in his life, he stamped them forever in his heart. We feel that love in the peace of our home and watch it grow in our hearts every day. He didn't just leave a memory; he left a living legacy of strength that continues to bloom in all of us. It's not a goodbye, but just a different way of being together."

The Most High's Favor

"I will forever be humbled and grateful that I was blessed to birth a child so perfect. The Most High showed me true favor when He gave us Coda Woda.

His life was a gift of pure grace, a soul of quiet strength that taught us more about love and humility than a lifetime ever could. To have carried him, to have raised him, and to have fought alongside him is the greatest honor of my life. He was a light in every heart he touched: parents, aunts, uncles, cousins, grandparents, friends, and siblings. I was chosen to be his mother, and for that, I am eternally blessed."
