Rose Marie Goltz

She was the strength of a massive family, the glue that bound us, and often the light that led us. She knew when to be an outlaw, when to be a mother and grandmother, and when to stand as a champion for the world to see. From a little place in Waco, Texas, to the south side of Fort Worth, and all the way to the Triple Crown Grand Champion stage of antique tractor pulling—she did it all with grace, grit, and the spirit of a true queen.

You were more than a mother and grandmother, more than a guide, the heart of our home, our shelter, our pride. With hands that mended, with love that healed, you stood unshaken, a force made of steel.

Through laughter and sorrow, through triumph and pain, you carried us forward through sunshine and rain.

The wisdom you gave, the strength you would lend, a mother, a grandmother, a warrior, a friend.

From Waco's warm fields to Fort Worth's embrace, Grandview; the grand champion stage where you took your place.

A queen among many, yet humble and true, no one in this world could ever be you.

Now silence has fallen where your voice used to be, but your love still lingers, it's woven in me.

So, rest now in glory, your journey is through, but this isn't goodbye—just a soft “see you.”
