All God's Children

*In the quiet light of morning, your smile still warms the air—
a gentle sun that never set, a song too pure for sorrow to bear.
You spoke in ways beyond the tongue, through laughter, touch, and gaze;
each moment with you was a prayer,
each breath a hymn of praise.*

*The world saw limits,
but Heaven saw wings—
you moved through life
as one who already knew the language of angels.
Now you rest in the arms of the One who shaped you whole, where every step is steady,
every voice is clear,
and joy runs unbroken as a river.*

*We will carry your light in the folds of our hearts, until the day we meet again—
all God's children gathered home, perfect, beloved, and free.*
