

A Life Well Lived
For Robert Alan Orcutt

A life well lived, a heart so kind, a soul that touched all hearts it'd find.
With hands that worked, and arms so strong, he built a legacy that will live on.
He coached his children, showed them how to live with love, to stand with proud.
He taught them strength; he taught them joy, he raised them with love, his greatest employ. He cheered on grandkids, always near, with every step, he'd wipe a tear.
In every hug, in every smile, he made each moment worthwhile.

Through every storm, through every trial, he walked with faith, with courage, style.
In gentle ways, he led the way, with grace and kindness every day.
The ranch, the work, the life he made, in simple joys, his heart was laid.
But in his love, he gave the most, to family and friends, his heart would boast.
Now his love remains, like a steady stream, a guiding light, a constant beam.
And though we miss him, we'll hold on tight, to the lessons learned, and the love so bright.

Though illness came, and took its toll, it never dimmed his radiant soul.
Surrounded by those who loved him near, he passed in peace, no more in fear.
Now he rests, but his love remains, a guiding light through all our pains.
And though we ache, we'll hold him tight, in memories warm, and endless light.
So we'll carry on, his lessons dear, with love, with faith, with no more fear.
For Robert's love will never fade—In our hearts, his legacy is made.

For Amber, who shared his heart and grace, a love that bloomed, no time could erase.
He cherished her deeply, with endless pride, a bond that could never be denied.
And for Weston, who carries his proud embrace, with steady hands and a steadfast grace. In work and life, Wes learned it all, how to rise up, how to stand tall.
He leaves behind a love so deep, a promise for his children to keep.
In memories sweet and lessons true, his heart will guide them through and through.
And for Vickie, whose heart is true, he leaves behind a love that grew.
A lifetime spent, side by side, her strength and his, forever tied.
