

REMEMBERING

Michael Dewayne Ellis*October 9, 1963 ~ June 14, 2026*

He always said He'd die with his boots on,
Not lying in a bed worn down and gone.
No long goodbye, no slow decline—
Just a man still standing in his time.

He worked his life in oil and dust,
Learned early what it means to trust.
Built with his hands, lived on his terms,
Earned every lesson the hard way learned.

He rode through life the same way too,
Took every hit like tough men do.
And if he was hard, it came from care—
He wanted me ready for life out there.

He didn't fear the final line,
Just wanted it honest, quick, and right.
And somehow even now it's clear—
He got his wish in his own way here.
