Dad

He could fix what was broken, build what needed to be made,

This was his gift in life not just a way to be paid.

He knew a little bit about everything, and somehow, that was enough.

If something needed fixing, Dad would say, "I've got this it's not that tough."

He could measure once and cut once, drive a nail with one strike,

The hands God gave him were truly his gift of life.

He could work with wood, hammer, wrench, or nail;

He could break down engines of any kind and anything he could weld.

He taught us not to be afraid of any task at hand.

He always said you can fix it if it was made by a man.

First DIY guy we knew, is what my sister and I used to say.

Our father showed us work was how to make a way.

No more listening to stories about you in the Navy.

No more hearing you say your nickname:

Dead Eye Shade Baby.
