My dearest,

I have seen churches as big as mansions, but I will never forget the little church back home where we stood hand in hand and promised we would be together for ever. So many times I lost my way in the dark storms of life and you were there to rescue me from the storm, and held me tight when I cried. Now we're at the cross road between illusion and reality, we both knew this was the inevitable. No rivers of tears, or mountains of remorse can ease the sorrow of your loss. Farewell my friend, until we embrace in a much better place.

-Your Husband.
