

A Daisy in the Sunlight

*She came with hands both kind and strong,
To a house where laughter felt half-gone.
A young heart brave, with steady grace,
She stepped into a mother's place.*

*Seven children, eyes still wet,
She kissed their grief, their fears she met.
With every meal, and every song,
She stitched the place where love belongs.*

*Her magic fingers, soft and wise,
Could fix torn seams or lull sad cries.
They painted hope, they soothed, they healed—
In every touch, her love revealed.*

*She painted joy on canvas walls,
In swirling hues where sunlight falls.
A brush, a bloom, a life made art—
She painted daisies from the heart.*

*Full of life, she'd chase the new,
In books, in crafts, in skies of blue.
No age could dim her yearning flame—
Each day, she'd learn, she'd grow, she'd claim.*

*Thirty grands would call her "mine,"
And sixty greats would bless her line.
Their laughter echoed soft and wide,
Like rivers flowing from her side.*

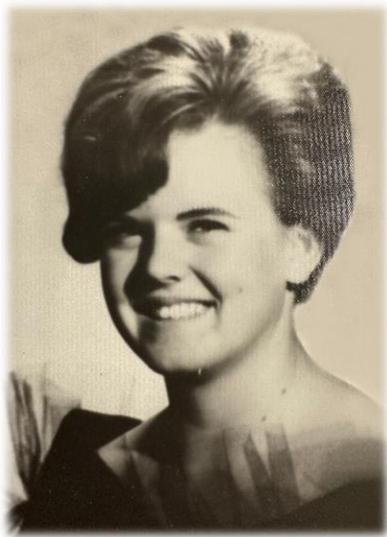

*Her faith, a quiet, burning star—
She walked with Christ, both near and far.
Her love, like petals white and gold,
A daisy's strength—pure, bright, and bold*
