

"The Void You Left"

You were the strength we leaned upon,
The steady light when days were long.
A father's hand, a brother's smile,
A husband's love that stretched a mile.
A son so proud, with heart so wide,
An uncle's laugh, a grandpa's pride.
In every role, you gave your best,
And now you've gone to gentle rest.
But oh, this world feels less complete,
Without your voice, your steady feet.
The chair is still, your coat untouched,
We miss you dearly, far too much.
You taught us love, you showed us grace,
Left memories time can't erase.
And though you've gone where we can't see,
Your spirit stays in family.
The echo of your life lives on,
In every dusk, in every dawn.
Yet still we feel that aching space—
A silent void we can't replace.
But in that space, love softly grows,
A garden tended by what we know:
That every smile, each tear we shed,
Is proof your soul lives on instead.
So rest now, where the angels sing,
Forever part of everything.
Your story's woven in our own—
Your Legacy we carry on.
